Boys! Parade Tomorrow and Boost Your Ward

MANY WITNESS THE DEMONSTRATION BY SCHOOL STUDENTS

Audience Numbers Close To 600 People at Last Night's Affair

MEETS WITH FAVOR

Program Was Given In A Very Creditable Manner

The 600 residents of Bristol who assembled in the high school auditorium last evening to witness the demonstration given by the pupils of the schools, were highly pleased with the numbers presented.

Girls and boys, numbering 15, gave an exhibition of typewriting to music, the notes being furnished by a phonograph record. This was an exceptionally interesting sight, and those present were much pleased with the progress made by the students of this class. The purpose of learning to type to music, is to make it possible for the scholars to gain correct time and rhythm.

Marching about the platform, while music was furnished, a number of girls of the Junior High School, gave a pretty waltz drill; and later several boys, who have been practicing under the direction of Roy Hoffman, athletic instructor, swung Indian clubs.

The entire program was in charge of the pupils, and in a splendid manner they showed what progress had been made under their instructors in history, spelling, typing, etc.

Other numbers were a geography race, by grade 7-B, and a history play by sixth grade of the Jefferson avenue building. Bristol high school orchestra also furnished musical numbers.

A folk dance, "Dorothy," by girls of classes 7-A and 7-B and 8-B, brought forth pleasing comments, the dance being well executed. Miss Muriel Macchette gave a vocal solo, "Sleepy Head," and was in splendid voice.

A harmonica solo "Rimando" by Nick Stallone, also brought forth much applause; and the original playlets by the students showed the results of much thought and effort.

MARBLE CONTESTS BEING STAGED HERE

Six marble champions, one from each ward of the borough, will battle this afternoon for the crown of borough champion on Leedom's Courts. The contest is one of the numerous events in Boys' Week which has created so much interest here and which culminates tomorrow with a monster street parade, track and field events and novelty contests on high school campus.

Ward elimination marble contests were staged here yesterday afternoon when 29 representatives from the six wards played to select the best from each section, it being necessary for the ward champion to capture the best out of three games.

Winners were as follows:
First Ward—Earl Roussos.
Second Ward—Raymond McGee.
Third Ward—Dominick Brashia.
Fourth Ward—Lawrence Mulligan.
Fifth Ward—Joseph Peterpaul.
Sixth Ward—John Koorkel.

The contestants played for an hour and a half before a winner was selected to represent each of the six divisions of the borough. There was a real battle for the honors of representing the Fifth Ward. Joseph Peterpaul tied the first game with Joseph Armstrong. Peterpaul then won the second contest, lost the third game but in the play-off between him and Armstrong, he hit Armstrong's man, "killing" him, thus capturing the Fifth Ward crown.

Roussos battled with four other boys before he won the First Ward honors and five contestants played three games before Mulligan was selected for the Fourth Ward representative. Six boys played for Sixth Ward honors but only two games were necessary due to the fact that Koorkel won the first two games played.

Dominick Brashia only had two opponents from the Third Ward and three games were played. Raymond McGee, considered a "dark horse," came from behind and defeated four contestants and was declared the winner in the second ward contest.

This afternoon the semi-finals and finals for borough champion will be played at four o'clock on Leedom's courts. Each ward champion will be presented with a Boy Scout knife. The one winning the borough championship will receive a handsome silver cup, suitably engraved.

BAKE SALE

COON HUNT IN PIGEON BOTTOMS

This is one of a series of articles being written by sportsmen in the interest of the Bristol Fish & Game Protective Association. An article appears in the Courier every Friday.

By Dr. C. G. Clark

One mild Saturday night in the late fall of '13, Dad and I met the boys at the dredge ditch bridge at seven o'clock sharp. There were Henry, Lloyd, Gus, Floyd, Charlie, Dad and I. We had four dogs: Meuse, a blue-speckled hound, belonging to Gus; Jim, a black and white, owned by Dad, and two others the names of which I have forgotten.

After a few words of greeting were exchanged we took to the north side, down along the ditch through woods composed chiefly of water oak and black oak. We were not more than three hundred yards in the woods, when Meuse struck a coon off to the northwest and brought him up to the north on a cold trail. From here she brought him in to the dredge ditch and made a lose in the water. We waited expectantly and before long the other dogs joined her and opened up hot on Mr. Coon just across the ditch. Suddenly the dogs stopped barking, made a circle and were back to bark at something treed up a slender black oak.

We were on one side of the ditch with the dogs and coon on the other. On our side a sharp axe was sinking fast through the butt of a six-inch sycamore; on the other side four dogs were trying to tear down a twelve-inch black oak.

As the sycamore fell we directed it across the fifteen foot span of water, which was about four or five feet deep, and cold, too. I judge should one have fallen in. Luckily, though, by the aid of a five foot leap at the lumber and distant end of our foot log, one at a time we each landed safely on the much desired side. After seeing that every one had made safe use of our improvised sycamore bridge, we scrambled up the bank and made haste through briar and brush to the exact center of attraction, which was that self-same twelve-inch black oak up which the hounds were now trying to climb.

There were too many leaves on the trees to shine the coon's eyes and bring him down with a load of number fours, so John climbed up the tree and dropped him out with a .22. When he hit the ground he was quite dead, so no coon and dog fight occurred. This came as a disappointment to all, for above all the hunter loves the fight; not that he is cruel at heart, but it is a thrill of the hunting game.

One mile below we recessed the ditch on an old bridge and the dogs soon struck a very warm trail. Believe me, they were sending him down the line! Rustle! The coarse mottled voices of those hounds resounding in quick succession through the bottom woodland was the music we longed to hear. Oh they sent him for over half a mile and then they bayed. "Caught him on the ground!" flashed through the accustomed mind of every one, and we were off to the battle scene with a rush.

Dad and I were in the lead as we topped a small ridge; here a very significant odor floated across to our nostrils; this told us he was simply not that kind of a kitty. Right there we stopped and let the others breeze by. Fortunately they managed to get the first .32 bullet between the skunk's eyes and all was over—I mean the smell.

He was a star skunk and perhaps worth seven dollars on the market. But knowing that between his present state and a marketable state there was an undesirable lot of smelling to be suffered, we gave the skunk, snail and all to Charlie Patmore, with the provision that he walk behind and carry him on a ten foot pole, and this said pole must always point backward—Charlie carried him the rest of the night.

Ordinarily the keen scent of a dog is temporarily destroyed after he has been so closely connected with one of those odious, little kitties, and in view of this fact we feared our dogs were done for the night. Our fear, however, was needless because ten minutes later the dogs treed another skunk; this one in the ground. By this time we were growing somewhat brave and dug down far enough to expose the tip of his tail; there we grew faint and called the dogs off. Anyway Charlie said seven dollars was enough to earn in one night.

Half an hour later we caught an opossum, which added another bit of fun to our hunt besides making the coat of another hunter hang a few pounds heavier on his shoulders. At midnight we came in north of Pigeon Switch treble and the dogs struck a cold trail. They circled here, there, and everywhere, trying to find a warmer trail. The coon had been in the creek and when a coon finds water there is no sense at all in his maneuvers, at least I am sure the coon dog must think so, especially if he happens to strike the trail after it has grown cold. This trail was cold and once we thought the dogs were about to give up, but gradually they worked slowly to the south of the treble; here the trail grew warmer and the dogs found where the coon had taken to his den, a large, tall sycamore, leaning sharply out over Pigeon Creek.

A diligent search was made by every eye to discover the exact whereabouts of this wily rascal, but he was nowhere exposed. Fifteen feet above ground we located a hole and there was only one thing to do, and this we did. The sharp heavy axe rose and fell, again and again; at each descension the blade bit deep, a chip flew off, and ringing echoes of each chop resounded through a still night. In less than an hour a twenty-six inch sycamore began to crack and pop and bang! down she went with a swish and mighty crash.

With a long stick the coon was prodded to an opening we had cut in the hollow tree, but he would not come out for the fight. After several failures we crowded him near the opening and Dad dropped a .32 bullet down through his head and coon number two was bagged.

Residing being a coon den this old sycamore was also a bee tree. When the tree fell a swarm of bees poured out of a knot hole at a point about mid-stream. Dad brushed them off and they floated downstream. Then Gus and he chopped out a section of this part of the hollow tree and there lay the honey, the thickest and clearest any I ever tasted. The eight of us ate all we dared, and left the remainder. I left a big slab of honey on the stump where the sycamore was cut. I couldn't eat it and I couldn't take it with me, where the sycamore was cut. Fortunately, though, I have that honey stored in my memory. The longer I keep it there the larger and sweeter it grows. Ah, I see it now, as large as a shoe box, that wild sweet honey.

It was three o'clock, so we pulled back up through Pigeon Bottoms. A few hundred yards from where Buckhorn empties into Pigeon Creek the dogs treed up a big elm heavily clumped with wild grape vines. Grasping the trunk of the vines I gave them a rough shaking and Dad saw something through a leafy canopy to my right self: "Three coons, three 'possums, one skunk; and—" All through my sleep I dreamed of honey—wild sweet honey.

MAN AND WIFE ARE CONVICTED; APPLY FOR A NEW TRIAL

Hilltown Township Couple Found Guilty of Serious Offense

ALL HAVE EXCUSES

Women Claim They Were Visiting House at The Time

(Special to Courier)

DOYLESTOWN, May 6.—After a short deliberation yesterday afternoon a jury in the criminal court of Bucks county convicted a Hilltown township man and his wife of charges of operating a house of ill repute and of selling and possessing liquor. Two York girls were also convicted of charges growing out of a raid on the house conducted last February by State Police.

The case was tried before Judge Samuel E. Shull, of Stroudsburg, specially presiding this week.

Lawrence Gilbert and his wife, Mrs. Clara Gilbert, were both convicted of keeping a bawdy house. They were acquitted on direction of the District Attorney and Court of charges of keeping a disorderly house. Lawrence Gilbert was also convicted of selling and possessing liquor.

Jesse Wiley, aged 33, and Peggy Heltzel, aged 21, both of York, Pa., were convicted of charge growing out of a raid on the place.

Sergeant William Burgoon, of the State Police Force, formerly stationed at Doylestown, was the prosecutor in the case.

Harry E. Grim, of Perkasie, attorney for the defendants, filed a motion for a new trial after the verdict had been announced. Gilbert was released under $2000 bail and his wife, under $1000 bail. The girls were each held under $500 bail.

The case started Wednesday afternoon. Yesterday Mrs. Gilbert took the stand in her own defense. Together with other defendants, Mrs. Gilbert flatly denied every charge made by the State Police who raided the place and testified early in the trial of buying whiskey at the Gilbert house for twenty-five cents a drink and of seeing improper actions inside the house while making an investigation of the place.

Miss Jesse Wiley, one of the defendants, testified that she was a cigar-maker and that it was while she was out of work in York and was not feeling well that she happened to come to Bucks county to visit Mrs. Gilbert. She denied accusations made by the State Police. Peggy Heltzel also denied all charges and said that she came to the Gilbert home with Miss Wiley last February and has been there ever since.

Arthur Heffner, a Perkasie carpenter, said that he was employed by the defendant, Lawrence Gilbert. He testified that he was at the place the night of the raid on business. Under cross-examination conducted by District Attorney Eastburn, the witness admitted that he too was arrested by State Police and fined $5 and costs in Doylestown before a justice of the peace for frequenting the Gilbert place.

Albert Briggs, of Perkasie, also testified for the defense, that he was a carpenter employed by Gilbert, and happened also to be at the place the night of the raid and was arrested with others and fined. He declared that at no time that night he saw anything improper in the Gilbert house.

Called as a character witness, William Fisher, of York county, testified that he knew Miss Heltzel and Miss Wiley for some years and knew their reputation for chastity to be of the very best. He knew them he said as "fine young ladies."

Joseph Dobo, of Woodside, and his wife, Julia Dobo, pleaded guilty yesterday afternoon before Judge Shull to charges of manufacturing, transportation and possession of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. Their home was raided by a Morrisville police officer.

Represented by a Trenton lawyer, the Court was informed by the attorney that Dobo had told him that his wife was carrying on the business with a fifteen-gallon still without his knowledge of the affair at their farm in Woodside.

"I do not doubt that Dobo told you that," said Judge Shull to the attorney, "but I do not believe the story," he added.

Judge Shull then sentenced Dobo to pay a fine of $200 and costs and serve Prison. Mrs. Dobo was fined $100 and costs and placed on probation for a period of one year.

Judge Gorman, of the Municipal Court of Philadelphia yesterday testified in Court here as a character witness for two young men arrested by Constable H. J. Lincoln Hughes, of Bensalem.

NEEDLWORK GUILD IN TWO-DAY SESSION

Bristol Women Attend And Hear Interesting Program On First Day

ARE IN SESSION TODAY

A number of Bristol women are attending the convention of the Needlework Guild of America which is being held in Philadelphia today. The opening session was held yesterday and was also attended by a number of women from here.

Among those present yesterday were Mrs. Clifford L. Anderson, Mrs. Henry E. Ancker, Mrs. Fred Kring, Mrs. William G. Buckman, Mrs. M. J. Hill, Mrs. David O. Taylor, Mrs. Edgar Opydie, Miss Esther Lawrence, Miss Lillie Wilson.

A plea for funds to aid the victims of the flood regions was made to delegates to the forty-second annual convention of the Needlework Guild of America yesterday, by the president of the organization, Mrs. Thomas J. Preston, Jr., of Princeton, N. J., who is the former Mrs. Grover Cleveland.

The convention, which will end today, is being held at the Bellevue-Stratford, Philadelphia.

Though the women ordinarily give aid through the contribution of new and old garments, financial aid will be furnished in this case, Mrs. Preston announced and $2000 has been raised within the past few days.

Mrs. Preston's request was made following a rally call to increase membership by Mrs. J. R. Cunningham, national vice-president of the organization, who was the principal speaker of the day. Mrs. Cunningham deplored the vast amount of money which is wasted each year when there are hundreds of children who cannot attend school because they lack shoes.

"We want to raise a national vision," Mrs. Cunningham asserted. "We must carry our message all over the United States."

"We build so extravagantly along so many lines and provide so much luxury and yet many of our children have to go without proper clothes. The needle is the tool of the woman's art."

"We need something besides money for our work. We need to put soul into it. We have a foundation great enough for anything, but we need more builders. I ask you to spread the gospel of our work into every town and city where there is no branch now. We have an individual responsibility toward the future of the guild."

There at one time was discussion concerning a change in the name of the guild, but Mrs. Cunningham took a stand opposed to the alteration, declaring that the organization "needs only to grow as big as its name."

Among the distinguished delegates to the convention are Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, wife of the former President, and Mrs. John Wood Stewart, founder of the guild, who arrived last yesterday afternoon for the sessions.

Officers elected for the coming year of the organization are Mrs. George Fales Baker, honorary president;

EXCHANGEITES AND PHYSICIANS DINE

Dr. Clarence Bartlette of Philadelphia, Is Speaker Of Evening

ABOUT 50 ARE PRESENT

The Bristol Exchange Club invited the physicians of Bristol, to be their guests at dinner last evening, and listen to an address by Dr. Clarence Bartlette, a former professor at Hahnemann Hospital in Philadelphia.

In addition to the physicians, many of the club members brought friends, so that the party which sat down to dinner comprised about 50 persons. The principal course in the menu was shad-roe, and the dessert peach pie and chocolate ice cream.

Dr. Bartlette was introduced by Dr. Frank Lehman, who was a pupil of the former. The speaker selected as his subject, "Modern Medicine," and the Departure of the General Practitioner.

He paid a splendid compliment to the family physician, and claimed that the general knowledge which he obtained in the continuous treatment of his patients, made his services invaluable. Patients who changed from their regular physician to a new one generally suffered by so doing, as it required time for the new physician to gain an understanding of their physical condition.

He said that three important things were necessary in the medical profession—deduction, logic and thoroughness. His remarks were punctuated by humorous stories and facetious illustration, which convulsed his audience with laughter.

The address in its entirety was thoroughly enjoyed, and all present felt that the evening had been pleasantly and profitably spent.

BOY WEEK

Stand back, men, stand back,
Give this week to the boy;
Renew again your childhood days
Amidst his plans and joy.

This week belongs to him alone,
So let him have full sway;
Undaunted let him rally forth
To capture each relay.

Crown him the marble cham;
Set him upon a throne.
Let each harmonica do its best
To bring the bacon home.

When rival baseball lines meet
Upon the diamond wide;
Strike one, then a hit and run—
Harrah, the score is tied.

The pole vault and broad jump,
Each will have its place,
Likewise the many handicaps,
The shoe and potato race.

Just watch the big parade go by
With every boy in line.
A poster tag on his shoulder,
And each one keeping time.

Hold up traffic, let them pass,
Give them the right of way;
For the manhood of tomorrow
Springs from boyhood of today.

—K. C. SMITH.

THEORY AND PRACTICE
One of those easy, faulty epigrams declares: "Make the scholar and you spoil the man." It is uttered sometimes by men who are proud to be known as "practical" and who make the grave mistake of emptying the vials of their scorn upon the theorists, who are assumed to know only what a textbook told them once upon a time.

But modernly the "practical" men are compounding the old quarrel with the theorists. Great industries are recognizing how hard they lean on laboratory science. In the need of exact measurement and specific process, they have learned to respect the physicist and chemist, inviting their aid as consulting engineers, as learned specialists in medicine are called to a patient's bedside.

It is a powerful alliance when a man who knows how to handle laboring lines himself up for the building of a bridge or the digging of a subway or the making of a road with the man who had the long course of technical training, who digests a blue-print as if it were delicious shortcake and who sees decimal places sprinkled over the landscape as if they were spring flowers.

Theory plus practice is the harmony to which our whole civilization marches toward the millennium. Though theory is needful and plans must be laid ere a structure of whatever kind is reared, it does not follow that all those who bury their noses in a book and browse in libraries are engaged in research and speculation valuable to the race. Nothing is easier than to sit snugly ensconced, out of the hurly-burly of the storm of living, reaching at attenuated metaphysical conclusions that are of no earthly use. Mental gymnastics there may be, but they are of the imperfect kind that overworks sinews of little consequence, permitting muscles that are important to be atrophied from idleness.

Training of school or college has for its end not an airy, foolish, fantastic chaff of speculation, but an equipment of fact—and poetic truth is not excluded—that is to be tested and extended by vital experience. The wise man will not shut a door and close a book and cease to be a scholar because he has left college and is out in the world at work. He will go on learning always.

Some of the girls have made a great showing this winter, and others have merely made a showing.

A lot of persons are not nearly so much worried about the Great Divide as they are about the present divvy.

It has been estimated that there are more shiny noses than shiny shoes, which proves nothing.

There is no sign that anyone is ever going to be able to invent a tire patch that will keep air in over-inflation.

Another sterling instance of inverse ratio is the sense some men put into their businesses and their love letters.

No doubt the theatrical producer who bills a bunch of hams as "an original Broadway cast" considers the radio unfair competition.

Turning a corner on two wheels, driving with one hand and burning up a boulevard are things that no one has done more than a certain number of times.

Matinee Ladies

BY William B. Courtney

Copyright 1927, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.
"MATINEE LADIES," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picture of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
Bob Ward, working his way through college, is informed by his chums, Freddy and Arch, that they have found an easy and profitable way to earn money—working as dancing partners, of afternoons, for rich women in a fashionable New Jersey roadhouse. Bob thinks it isn't a fit way to make a living; but, faced with eviction for unpaid rent, reluctantly agrees to go to the roadhouse. There he sees the prettiest, sweetest girl he had ever laid eyes on. She is Sally, the cigarette girl. Before he can talk to her, his employer takes him in tow.

Proud of the latest and handsomest acquisition to the Palisado Inn's staff of dancing male entertainers, Madame Leonine presented Bob to his first partner:

"Mazie, this is Mr. Ward. Bob, meet Miss Revere!"

Reverend! Good old New England name, Bob thought. The Reverend of Woburn, Massachusetts? He gave timid voice to this last possibility. But:

"Woburn? Where's that? It sounds like a mammy song. Now I'm one of the Reverends of Ninety-second Street and the first row in the Folies. Say, sonny, don't mistake me for the usual dame that you'll meet in this place. I'll be frank with you. You look like a nice kid, and I think I'm going to like you. I'm not rich, but my gentleman friend is, see? However, I'm an old friend of Madame Leonine's. She and me were in the chorus together, back in our yo-on-on—well back a year or two ago. I come over here because I like to dance, and I like to chew the fat with Leo, and I like to team up with such of the lady customers as think they can play bridge, and relieve them of their husband's hard-earned dollars. I won't have any false impressions between me and you, kid. I just wanted to grab off your first dance for myself—and then surrender you to the hungry rich—who are ogling you. Just a little conceit of mine. C'mon, let's go!"

They danced. It WAS a splendid orchestra. A marvelously wax-groomed floor. Bob, feathery and graceful on his toes for all his more than two hundred pounds of charge the football brawn, waited around with Mazie Revere—and enjoyed it. He abandoned himself to the intoxication of the rhythm. Mazie raved in his ear—that is, up toward his ear, which she lacked a full twelve inches of reaching.

"Kid, you're some tripper! The best I've ever done a lap with!"

But Bob, who had the faculty of enjoying purely physical and animal things with his body, while his mind and heart worked elsewhere, gave scant heed to her mouthings. His bright eyes were following the quaint figure of Sally Smith from table to table.

Mazie saw whom he was watching, and bit her lips.

"Say," she said, with some heat and asperity despite the indulgent superiority of her years, "you are a green kid, all right. Failing for the cigarette girl first crack out of the box!"

"What?" demanded Bob, hotly but lamely.

"I said—Sally Smith is a nice child."

Bob clutched unguardedly at the elder sister attitude. "Isn't she!" he declared. "You—know her pretty well? She— isn't—err— the usual kind that work to dance halls?"

Mazie laughed richly. "You silly fool. You've been reading cheap magazine stories, confession yarns, about the girls who work in dance halls. I bet. Say let me tell you, the only people who don't know how to take care of themselves around the average roadhouse and dance hall and cabaret and night club are the customers. They're the only ones who get nothing for something!"

Bob felt himself getting red. He was not used to talking in this quasi-intimate way with women. In fact, he had never met an outspoken woman of Mazie's type before. Although he had no trouble in cataloguing her from things he had heard, and stories he had read, as a "gold digger." However, she was not the type with whom to discuss—Miss Smith, the cigarette girl. Anyone could see that with half a glance.

Yet what was—Miss Smith—doing now? Bob, though he missed Mazie, turned not a dip nor a nuance of the music and the pagan rhythm, also did not take his eyes off Sally Smith. He noticed her at the table of a lone, well-dressed, elderly man. A leering salesman, out to pick someone up for a gay afternoon. The man had attempted to stroke Sally's hand in handing her a bill for a packet of cigarettes, and pushing back her hand with the change.

Bob saw that. He wanted to rush over and sock the man. Involuntarily his fingers tightened on Mazie's shoulder. She stared up at him with suddenly quickened ardor—ardor, however, that filtered away instantly when she saw that he wasn't looking at her. Her mistake!

Bob expected Sally to slap the man. She did nothing of the sort. She just bantered with him. Bob, amazed, watched closely.

The two, Sally and the man, chatted a while longer. Then Bob saw Sally, as if giving in after long cajoling, mutter something shyly, which the man copied down triumphantly in a book. Then Sally sidled quickly away, looking—Bob thought—guilty.

The thing was obvious. Sally had given the man her address. Her telephone number, too, perhaps.

So! She was that sort, after all. The aura of youth, and innocence, and romance, was all part of the make-up, a complement for her trade. Still, he could not bring himself to believe it. Even when he saw her immediately afterwards repeat the incident with another man.

Now she was talking to a third man—one of two old rones seated at a table on the edge of the dance floor—when Bob whirled by with Mazie in the very last strains of the dance. In passing, Bob caught a flash of the conversation.

The man said: "Come on, sweetheart, be a sport—give me your phone number and you can keep the change out of that ten-spot."

And Sally said: "Well, all right, if you insist—it's Rhinelander," so and so.

Bob's muscles did not even imaginatively mangle a rone for at that. He decided she was not worth getting excited about. He would forget the little eye and mind and soul filling picture she had made when first his entranced gaze had rested upon her. He had been fooled, misled. A misapprehension, that was all.

It was Mazie who set him straight. Mazie with the lagoon green eyes and the faithful grin, who had been covertly watching his appraisal of Sally's table-to-table piled trade. Mazie chuckled to Bob, even as the dance ended, and they joined in the clapping for an encore.

"What's the matter, college boy? Wondering why Sally's giving her name and phone number to all those rones? Say, that's just Sally's little game—the game that makes ten-cent packets of cigarettes worth five to ten bucks. She gives a phony name and number to each and every one of those simple-minded rones."

Bob tried to affect a disinterest, which, of course, only served to make Mazie more sure of the truth of her jealous guess that he was smitten.

But inwardly Bob's heart was bounding and thumping in gay rebellion. His illusion, his ideal, his vision—all these were still intact.

And that, where Youth is waiting to be served great gods of Romance cake with Cupid icing, means a lot!

CHAPTER V
"I wonder," thought Sally Smith, the cigarette girl, to herself, shyly conscious of the persistent way in which the new dancing entertainer's eyes sought her, "what the heck's the matter with me?"

How should Sally Smith know, to be sure? After all, Sally Smith was so young, so freshly launched on the overcast path which lure the trusting feet, and tempt and tangle the way of just such youth and innocence as hers. After all, Sally Smith was just a child.

A bud uttering under the first loving touch of direct sun rays. The ardent beams of this big, handsome boy's eyes.

Since first he had burst upon her frank girlish sight hardly half an hour since, Sally Smith had moved about her business in that dance hall like a blossom taking its first garden bower sunbath.

THE MERCHANTS HERE--

Are known to all of us and if purchases made here are not satisfactory they can readily be exchanged and the MERCHANTS WILL MAKE IT RIGHT.

A CIVIC DUTY--

It is a civic duty owed to the community to buy in our home town. Local merchants support Bristol and its activities and in turn they deserve to be supported.

VARIETY OF STOCKS--

Often times it is the complaint of the shopper who goes out of town to buy that local stores do not carry the assortment or the grade of stock which is desirable. Any wide-awake merchant will stock his shelves with that class of merchandise that is demanded. That is only good business.

PRICES ARE LOWER--

This is another excuse which is often given by those who go out of Bristol to shop. It is reasonable to suppose that merchants here are not making any larger profits than those engaged in business in the cities. Overhead expenses in Bristol are sure to be lower than those in the high rent districts of the large cities.

The altruism which is being manifested in the Mississippi flood district is needed in the lives of public office-holders. Dr. John H. Finley, of New York, and former president of New York State University, told members of the guild last night at the session preceding a reception to the delegates at the Bellevue-Stratford.

There is too great danger that with the influx of paid public servants there will be an efflux of the spirit of kindness and imagination from service, the speaker warned.

"One man in every thirty is a public servant today," Dr. Finley estimated. "Today there is arising a zone of selfish effort for the public good. There are always willing substitutes at hand to take public positions to such an extent that the name of the office-seeker has become a term of opprobrium. There is an evident necessity for following the laws we enact and the people we place in office with unabated interest. There is great need for true altruism and the cultivation of the human spirit to its fullest capacity.

Mrs. Preston received a letter of congratulation on the work being done by the guild from President Coolidge, who expressed his regret that he and Mrs. Coolidge would be unable to attend the sessions of the convention.

four months in the Bucks County sales township, who pleaded guilty to driving an automobile while drunk. Harry E. Mather, of Croydon, pleaded guilty to a charge of unlawfully permitting the use of his automobile by one under the influence of liquor. Howard Smith, of Croydon, pleaded guilty to operating an automobile while drunk on March 20 in Bristol township.

Judge Gorman testified that he had known of the boys personally, and one of the defendants in particular, Harry E. Mather, and that he was shocked when he heard of the arrest.

The defendants were each fined $200 and costs and were informed their automobile licenses would be revoked for one year.

"I take into consideration the fine reputation you have enjoyed," stated Judge Shull. "No doubt you have learned a real lesson in this case that will be punishment to you. Of course, some law violations are more flagrant than others and this seems to be one of them."

Friends suggested trying these wonderful Colic Pile Pills first, which I did with marvelous success. After taking one bottle I was entirely cured." Signed: Geo. E. "However, let me say, that so far as this Court is concerned, the drunken driver is a menace to the people of this State who travel the highways lawfully. It makes no difference how you obtained your liquor, at a social event or any other way."

A story of one of the most heinous crimes in the history of Bucks County criminal court records was related yesterday afternoon before a jury by the Commonwealth testimony in the trial of William Winkler, aged 16, of Milford Square.

Because of the terrible nature of the case, many left the Court room. The charges against Winkler were brought by State Police and other officers and by the father of Bernice Fields, aged 9, daughter of Walter Fields, Sr., of Haycock township.

Witnesses were called by the Commonwealth. The little girl in tears, related to the jury a story of how Winkler assaulted her while she was on her way to school on the morning of February 11, near the Mountain House, Haycock township. She told how Winkler stopped his automobile, coaxed her to get in and when she refused, how he pulled her in and threw her in the rear and placed bags over her and drove her down the road and assaulted her.

John Fields, a cousin of the little girl, who was with her when Winkler stopped his car, identified Winkler yesterday. Other witnesses, including Walter Fields, Jr., a brother of the girl, and Andrew Neff and others, testified that they saw Winkler pass the school in his automobile and identified certain numbers of the license on the car.

HEALTHY OLD MEN AND WOMEN
NEED NEVER HAVE GRAY HAIR

As Long As Color Glands Remain Normal and Active Plenty
Of Pigment Will Keep Hair Its Natural Shade

IF HAIR IS FADED AND STREAKED WITH
GRAY BEGIN REVIVING COLOR GLANDS

Simple Tonic Starts Youthful Color
Returning Again

Everybody knows if their color glands and hair roots are active and normal they will continue indefinitely to have rich, natural colored hair ending it. Results are so natural, gradually free of gray and off-colored hair and men as well as women use it.

A doctor several years ago asked himself this question: "Why not rub a stimulating tonic into the scalp change and to test what it will do one that will revive, strengthen and tone up those inactive glands so that nature in her own infallible way will resume putting plenty of pigment into the hair tubes—surely the hair will then again resume its original, natural, beautiful shades of youth regardless of the user's age or the condition of their hair."

REMARKABLE DISCOVERY
The doctor's search for a tonic that would accomplish this purpose led him into endless experiments, but the final result was worth it. He didn't want a dye or tint and it of course must be harmless and something that could be used for years and years without the slightest injury to hair or scalp.

Under the name of Lea's Hair Tonic anyone may now purchase the tonic he finally perfected. For several years now hairdressers and people scattered all over the country have been using it. Results are so natural, gradually free of gray and off-colored hair and men as well as women use it.

Users have been amazed at the younger appearance that comes with the disappearance of gray hairs from their head. If any reader desires to try a bottle of Lea's Hair Tonic on the maker's absolute guarantee of complete satisfaction they should pin a dollar bill to this advertisement and send it to the Lea's Tonic Company, Brentwood, Md., with their name and address plainly written. A generous sized bottle will be sent prepaid anywhere. Leading druggists have Lea's Hair Tonic, $1.00 per bottle.—(Adv.)
